

Take Command of Trans-Atlantic Plane Ferrying Service

London.—The air ministry announced the appointment of Air Chief Marshal Sir Frederick Bowtell to command a new organization which will take delivery of warplanes from the United States to Britain. Bowtell is a former Royal Air Force commander and flew the first trans-Atlantic flight in 1931. He is now in command of the Royal Air Force's Atlantic command. Sir Bowtell is being replaced by Air Marshal Sir Philip Jones, who is now in command of the Royal Air Force's Atlantic command.

Informal sources said Sir Bowtell will have to make arrangements to regularize the new command which will bring the trans-Atlantic plane ferrying task, hitherto a function of the ministry of aircraft production, under the control of the air ministry. While in Canada he will confer with Dominion air officials.

The air ministry was now negotiating for his services to develop the ferrying command which has been in existence since 1938. He is 41, and began his service career in his youth as a naval reserve cadet. Later he became flying officer, his command as commander of the Royal Air Force's Atlantic command. He is now in command of the Royal Air Force's Atlantic command.

His successor in the coastal command, who is 54, was a Royal Air Force officer in the early days of the war. He was in command of the Royal Air Force's Atlantic command. He is now in command of the Royal Air Force's Atlantic command.

German Pocket Battleship Is Seriously Cracked In Aerial Action
The air ministry announced that the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee was seriously damaged in an aerial attack. The vessel was believed badly damaged.

They must have been taken completely by surprise," declared one of the air ministry officials.

Just days after Admiral Graf Spee had been seen on the Atlantic coast, the battleship Admiral Graf Spee, 35,000-ton pride of the Nazi navy, coastal command, was seriously damaged in an aerial attack.

A long-range, twin-engine bomber, which was armed with a large number of five screening anti-aircraft destroyers to ram home the explosive onslaught.
